Many dog owners mistake tapeworms for pinworms because the worms look similar.

Both parasitic worms attach in the intestines where the adult worms lay eggs. At times, you may see small tapeworm segments outside the anus, much like pinworms crawl from the anus.

Pinworms and tapeworms are often confused. Pinworms live in the human intestines, commonly those of children. Dogs do not get pinworms. However, dogs and children can have tapeworms.

Tapeworms are transmitted to humans and dogs by way of fleas. They are easily treated in both canines and kids.

Thanks for answering my question. What you are describing is tapeworms. Dogs get tapeworms either from hunting small mammals (mice, squirrels, etc) or from fleas. Most the time in dogs it is fleas, so be sure to check closely for these as well and you may want to get your dog started on a good flea preventive as well.
